Xafinity Claybrook's actuarial software, SuperVal, is now part of university curriculum

Actuarial students at Queens University Belfast are benefiting from the university's forward thinking approach to teaching and graduate employment with their adoption of Xafinity Claybrook's SuperVal software into their actuarial degree course.

Colin O'Hare, Course Director in Actuarial Studies at Queens commented:

'As well as offering students a key insight into the real working life of an actuary we are meeting the demands of the actuarial profession for graduates to become quickly productive with practical skills in their new working environment.'

Xafinity Claybrook Account Manager Fahim Saiyed, commented:

"We are extremely pleased to be involved in a programme which will help actuarial students graduate with more real-life skills and experience of best practice tools from day in the working world. This recognises the long running relationship which has existed between actuarial students and SuperVal as they progress through work placements to become fully qualified."

SuperVal is used by over a third of firms listed by the Institute of Actuaries, making it the market leader in the UK and an industry standard for actuarial valuation calculations.
